Headline:
Variable amounts of cloud and sunny spells.

Today:
Rather cloudy across some western parts of England and Wales, with a few light showers in places, whilst many other parts will be dry with variable cloud and sunny spells. Showers affecting the Northern Isles at first.

Tonight:
Cloudy with some light rain or drizzle far north and north-west, else dry with clear spells leading to a frost in places. Patchy fog and low cloud forming in places.

Monday:
Another mainly dry day with variable cloud and some spells of sunshine, best in the east, whilst a little drizzle is possible in the far north and west.

Outlook for Tuesday to Thursday:
Dry but rather cloudy Tuesday; rain and stronger winds arriving into the northwest later and moving southeast whilst weakening through Wednesday. Brighter, cooler weather with showers following into the northwest.
